

Special Needs Planning

My child turned 18 yrs old, what next?

As soon as a child turns 18, parents lose all decision-making rights; immediately your child becomes a legally capable adult, responsible for making all of their own decisions and managing their own affairs.

Your child may also be eligible for government assistance programs. We can help advise you in the options you have and useful planning tools for you to make the most of these programs.

We're here for you:

Guardianship

Powers of Attorney

Special Needs Trusts

Understanding Governmental Benefit Options

About Us

Attorney Ashley S. Day focuses her practice on assisting individuals and families with personalized special needs legal planning, including and not limited to:

guardianship, powers of attorney, special needs trusts, revocable living trusts, declaration for mental health treatment, wills and trust and probate administration

As a former Special Education Teacher and growing up with a brother with special needs she would like you to know this:

"I have a passion for stewardship. It's helping you protect and plan for the people and things that you care about. That's truly what has fueled my focus on helping families who have loved ones with special needs."
